Students' Society tightens security system in Union

by JOHN DUFORT
Associate Editor

A tight new security system has been introduced into the Union this fall as a result of the discovery that thousands of dollars of Students' Society money was being stolen by enterprising students.

Illegal long distance telephone calls totalling $12,000, bookstore shrinkage of almost $20,000, and numerous other leakages resulted in the new security measures.

"Last year this place was wide open," commented Building Manager John Jones, who took over the position last June. "Master keys were easily obtained, and a person could get into any room if he put his mind to it."

But this year the only master key in existence is the one in Jones's back pocket. There is also one set of sub-master keys, which is passed from porter to porter as they change shifts.

Before they receive their keys, club presidents must sign an inventory list accepting responsibility for contents of their office. Names of others allowed to enter must be submitted to the Building Manager.

"The student executive committee set a good precedent," Jones said, "by relinquishing their right to hold master keys."

The bill for illegal telephone calls last year included a $560 call to Germany. Temporary measures taken to date this year have uncovered more than $100 in unauthorized calls from one office alone.

Jones stressed that it is getting harder and harder to get one through without getting caught. By the beginning of November an automatic system will make it impossible to make a long-distance call without going through the switch-board.

Bookstore losses are expected to diminish because of a locked storage area built over the summer in the sub-basement.

Carleton opens co-op bookshop

OTTAWA (CUP) — A student co-operative bookstore at Carleton University has forced prices at the Administration-run bookstore down five per cent.

"This proves they're operating on a profit basis and channeling the funds into general university revenue," co-op organizer Jim Russell said last Thursday. He said the university bookstore prices for books sold by the co-op dropped to between the old price and the co-op price.

Russell and his eight-man crew obtained their books on consignment from the Student Christian Movement bookstore in Toronto. Packaged into complete course bundles, co-op books sell six to 18 per cent below university prices.

The co-operative, operating at the main junction of the underground tunnels which link all Carleton buildings, opened Thursday. It offers book sets for four first- and second-year English courses, and a set for a compulsory humanities course.

Russell said his group aims to establish a full bookstore in the fall of 1967, pending the success of this year's pilot. "And it's looking very good," he said. "It's so good, professors and departments are helping us, contrary to administration edicts."

Like most Canadian universities, Carleton does not make public its accounts. But Russell estimates all required books could be sold at an average of 12 per cent below current bookstore prices.

UGEQ executives plan campus visits

In an attempt to develop stronger ties with Quebec students, the executive of l'Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec (UGEQ) began a visiting program yesterday designed to take them to almost every campus in the province.

Jean Pelletier, (UGEQ) Secretary-General, said the five-man team will address students at all classical, teachers, and technical schools and universities.

Included in the tour are Sir George Williams University, Loyola College and Marianopolis College. McGill, not a UGEQ member, is not on the itinerary.

How sad. Beneath the guise of a Cro-Magnon criticism of the McGill course evaluation survey, Leslie Roberts, that grand old man of 'ancient McGill', again finds time to slop in his own mediocrity. Catering to an audience of paternalistic 'liberals', Mr. Roberts can only be classified as an anti-intellectual. His issue is not with the Course Guide but with students as a whole and the rationale behind this publication. He considers the present trends in student activism a personal affront to the integrity of his generation. A reactionary who still judges these issues in ethnic terms, he is offended that Professor Michel Brunet of l'Université de Montréal might now have evidence of teaching inefficiencies at McGill; it is an attack upon Anglo-Saxon entrenchment as personified in the Faculty of McGill.

Mr. Roberts admits: "I have not surveyed my Alma Mater personally. Nor have I spent much time lately asking undergrads what they want to get out of a college education." In fact, he indicates no desire whatsoever to meet students — certainly not on their own level. Therefore he cannot conceive of educational improvements brought about through the conscientious efforts of undergraduates who are actually concerned with upgrading the present lecture system. Regardless of Mr. Roberts' ideas on students (and there is a grain of truth in what he says) the Course Guide does not support any one philosophy of higher education; it merely presents both majority and minority opinions on each course surveyed. It cannot interpret student values. Its authors are the students themselves, who represent a large variety of backgrounds and attitudes. Mr. Roberts appears quite shocked at the criticism of what he terms 'first-rate professors'; academic qualifications do not produce a good teacher. The Course Guide is not concerned with the research abilities of faculty members, but is designed to forestall a 'publish or perish' approach to teaching at McGill. Nor are students particularly interested in Leslie Roberts' personal relationships with McGill professors; a teacher's conversational abilities in the Faculty Club or anywhere else off-campus are not necessarily an indication of classroom performance.

"Looking backward . . ." as he is wont to phrase this habit, Mr. Roberts romanticizes the 'old school' of lecturers, and can only deplore today's practice of course evaluations as "assassination by computer". He is bewildered by the simplest technique in efficiency — the compilation of raw data by computer. Mr. Roberts even hints that the Course Guide was distributed in some underhand manner, and that the publishers deliberately neglected to reprint a copy of the questionnaire in the Guide itself. May it be said that this document was never intended for consumption by the questionnaire. Mr. Roberts may rest assured, meanwhile, that McGill professors on the whole 'bat' more than .300; indeed, a tabulation of overall ratings reveals that over 55% of those professors surveyed were evaluated as satisfactory or better.

Can't See

Dear Sir,

The administration must be properly notified of the improper lighting in the Leacock and Union Buildings.

- 1) Leacock Building
 - a) Leacock Auditorium L132
 - the opaque cement walls do not reflect the light
 - there is an insufficient number of lights in the ceiling and on the walls
 - the existing lights are of a glaring intensity
 - the slide projector has a glaring back light
 - the ceiling hardwood and dull yellow carpets add to the gloom, and shadows
 - b) Leacock Lobby and Common room
 - the artificial lights do not thoroughly compensate for the filtered outside light in the crannies and corners
 - lack of reflection from walls, floors and ceiling
- 2) The Union
 - basement gloominess
 - window lighting too heavily relied upon.

The situation must be rectified as it causes eyestrain, listlessness and general fatigue.

Ontario government favors federal education expenditure

OTTAWA (CUP) — Unlike the federal government, the Ontario provincial government places a higher priority on federal aid to education than it does on medical insurance for all Canadians.

Premier John Robarts told the federal-provincial tax structure committee last Wednesday that Ontario supports the principle of universal public medicare, but welcomed the decision of the federal government to postpone its scheme until July 1, 1968.

However, the provincial government does not approve of postponing federal aid to education.

"While Ontario believes firmly in the desirability of universal medicare schemes for Canadians, we are convinced that... expenditures on higher education deserve the greatest priority," the Premier said.

Medicare is already universally available in Ontario through the Ontario Medical Services Insurance Plan and various private insurance schemes, but the province does not have sufficient facilities and personnel to accommodate and teach students already in their final high school years, he said.

Viet Nam anti-war committee formed

A group of students opposed to the war in Viet Nam formed a campus committee last night to unify opinion against the hostilities.

The Committee to End the War in Viet Nam will hold its first open meeting today at 1 pm in Rm B23 of the Union.

Seven students participated in the organization of the group. It will sponsor speakers and seminars and organize demonstrations to draw public attention to the Viet Nam war.

Saul Ship, BSc 3, one of the organizers, explained the move: "Since the Students' Council has decided not to take political stands this year, someone has to."

"Many people were in favor of an SC stand to support the UGEQ demonstration on the issue last winter. The committee will supply a means for the expression of this opinion," he added.

The present visits will be conducted until October 5 and another tour will be undertaken at the end of October.

Pelletier said the visits "will give us an idea of the problems encountered by the individual institutions and allow us to explain the role of UGEQ to them."

"We shall also obtain first-hand information for future programs involving the various colleges."

Daily appointments

Peter Allnutt, BA 3, has been appointed News Editor of the Daily. He replaces Elly Alboim, who has resigned.

Allnutt had been Copy Editor of the Daily and worked last year on the political beat. He is in Honours Sociology and Political Science.

His place as Copy Editor will be taken by Sue Swan, a fourth-year English major. Miss Swan was a desk editor last year.

Alboim will continue to serve the paper as a Senior Staff Writer.

As News Editor, Allnutt will supervise the newsgathering functions of the Daily and act as chief liaison between the paper and student organizations seeking publicity space.

Jones sires computing society

A new club has been formed to "help undergraduates take advantage of the wide scope of benefits to be found with adequate understanding of modern computers".

The club, to be called the McGill Computing Society, has been organized to bring together people who are interested in all phases of data processing and computer work.

West Indians plan week-long series of events

West Indians at McGill will have an opportunity to meet with fellow students and become familiar with the West Indian Society at a series of events planned this week.

The program is as follows:

Wednesday — General Meeting at the Union at 7 pm followed by a soirée.

Friday — Dance to be held in conjunction with the Conference on West Indian Affairs which McGill is hosting this year.

Sunday — Picnic at Rawdon.

Wednesday — Activities Night.

Membership cards will be available at the General Meeting and at Activities Night.

On a more practical level, the club intends to offer instruction in programming techniques. This service will be for all undergraduates, who might at some date wish to use the McGill computer facilities for survey work or labs. All undergraduates are entitled to use the equipment; all that is necessary is the knowledge of how to do so.

The club also hopes to compile a program library for the use of undergraduates. Such a resource would prevent useless duplication of work, as well as enabling students to use the computer for projects without the lengthy process of setting up an entire new program.

ARTS AND SCIENCE INTRAMURAL PROGRAM

Sign up lists are posted in all Arts and Science buildings for Touch Football League. Arts and Science will have two separate teams for the intramural sports program.

Tennis, golf and track entries accepted only at the Gym in Room 3. For further information call John Osborn 844-0825.

Aside from practical instruction, the club will invite guest speakers, conduct tours and screen films on subjects related to computer work. These would concentrate on showing the development to date as well as the future possibilities for computers.

President of the club is Peter Jones, BEng 4. No previous experience is needed and only an interest in the theory and use of computers is asked of prospective club members.

The first meeting is scheduled for Thursday, September 22, with weekly meetings thereafter.
